Upland businessmen fight misleading fliers

Upland's businessmen have joined in the city's redevelopment melee, pledging to combat "misleading statements" found in fliers circulated by the Upland Citizens for Open Government.

COG members are offering these fliers in front of supermarkets as they encourage residents to sign a referendum petition. They need 2,300 signatures to place approval of the city's Redevelopment Plan before the voters in a special election.

The Upland Chamber of Commerce board of directors voted unanimously last week to combat the misinformation with a media campaign of their

Bill Rugg, public affairs vice president for the chamber, said chamber members are particularly upset that many residents don't realize the impact of their signature on the petitions. "Many citizens are signing these petitions without realizing what a special redevelopment election will cost the community," he said.

The city will spend between $15,000 and $20,000 to fund a special election, because the ballots and preparations cannot be completed in time to put the measure on the November ballot. More important, an election could cause at least one year's delay in the program, resulting in a potential loss of $17 million. Approval of the Redevelopment Plan is held in limbo until the election is completed. If the voters approve of the plan, they will be too late to start redevelopment this year. The plan must be effective this month to use 1982 as Upland's tax base year — the year property taxes to other agencies are frozen and any increases go to the Redevelopment Agency.

"That could mean a loss of $50,000 to $500,000 in one year of tax increment revenues," Rugg said. "Over the 35-year redevelopment period, delays could cost the community as much as $17 million."

Their frustration stemmed from the COG fliers asserting redevelopment only benefits wealthy developers. "The fliers being circulated by the Upland Citizens for Open Government in their efforts to obtain signatures... do not accurately state the effects of redevelopment on our community," said Rugg.

The fliers state, "Big developers receive many special considerations... You do not establish a redevelopment area to rehabilitate or restore existing buildings. The purpose is to encourage BIG developments." Chamber directors decided this statement was particularly unfair.

"This is certainly not the case,"
Rugg said in response. "Redevelopment will benefit the entire community, and particularly the residents of older areas of the city. It will permit property owners in the project area to obtain low-interest loans to fix up their existing homes," he reasoned. "It will encourage many small projects, and make it possible for the city to improve streets, storm drains, sewer systems."

Rugg said that Upland has little land for large developments and that the agency would offer developers more incentive to provide quality development on available sites.

The chamber also objects to a statement charging that schools and water districts will lose revenues to the Redevelopment Agency. One flier reads, "Redevelopment allows for county tax money to be diverted to the Community Redevelopment Agency. This money is part of that which normally goes to schools."

Rugg countered, "Schools are funded by the state, and will not be affected at all. If at some later time this situation changes, we have agreements with school districts so that the funds would be redirected to them. Rather than curtailing services, the redevelopment project will enable the city to improve them because of the additional revenues."

Chamber members plan to begin their information campaign next week. They may resort to passing out fliers alongside COG members at Upland supermarkets.

They plan to alert citizens that their signatures can be removed legally if they wish. "All that's required is to file a statement with the Upland City Clerk asking that the name be withdrawn from the referendum petition regarding Upland Community Redevelopment Project Area No. 1," Rugg noted.

A NEW SCHOOL? — Pomona College has returned to its normal routine this week, but these two workers recently covered up the school's sign with another one reading "Brighton University." Instructor, architect named planner

By NANCY WALLACE Staff Writer

The Upland City Council has named Joe Ramos, a mt. san Antonio College instructor and independent architect, to a four-year term on the Upland Planning Commission.

Ramos, 36, and a life-long resident of Upland, has served on the city's Architectural Commission two years and is vice chairman of that body. He also served on the Tri-City Advisory Committee, planning Rancho Cucamonga's incorporation.

Ramos said he will not use his appointment as a stepping stone to the City Council or any other political office. "Politics," he said, "always leaves a bad taste in my mouth ... I'm just looking forward to directing the city's development," he said. Ramos said he approves of the city's planning goals and sees no need for major changes.

He noted that the present economic slowdown may cause the commission to relax some requirements and restrictions for developers, but he would not approve of permanently relaxing any of Upland's safeguards.

Ramos said that, as an architect, he has the expertise to seriously evaluate developers' supposed financial inability to meet the city's more stringent development rules and requirements, and will judge each project individual-

"My projects have to go through the same process as anyone else's, and we've experienced that situation ourselves," he said. "I do have the technical background to make these decisions."

Ramos said he is looking forward to redevelopment in Upland, seeing that specific projects meet the city's planning process. As an independent architect, Ramos has seen redevelopment produce community hostility and updated housing projects in Riverside. He said he feels prepared to deal with the high emotions surrounding Upland's Redevelopment Plan.

Ramos fills the vacancy left by the retirement of John Meyer, a 12-year commission veteran.

OMSD joins in threat to sue state over funds

By RICHARD PERAZA Staff Writer

Ontario-Montclair School District will join with other California districts in threatening to sue the state for "failure to meet its constitutional obligation to adequately fund its public education system."

Trustees unanimously approved a resolution Thursday night authorizing district officials to consider the suit.

The threat of a possible suit takes direct aim at a pet peeve of trustees: the state's recent policy of mandating special education programs for handicapped children and then axing the funding needed to run the projects.

Trustees have complained the situation affects every student in OMSD because money from the general fund must then be taken from regular classroom uses and earmarked for the special education programs.

Deputy Superintendent George Duerr said OMSD is currently looking at a possible special education and transportation deficit of about $382,000.

He said there is a possibility two-thirds of that might be restored by the Legislature if certain bills are passed.

The resolution notes the cutbacks are especially hard to face because tight money is already forcing cutbacks on local programs, materials, supplies and

The document also notes that "The state of California has not met the court's Serrano judgement to equalize income to all school districts to within $100 per pupil by June 1, 1981

'Be it resolved that the Board of Trustees of the Ontario-Montclair School District is gravely concerned about the threat to quality education in the district and resolves to pursue means to compel the state Legislature to adequately fund the district, including the possibility of joining with other districts to bring legal action against the state of California for failure to meet its constitutional obligation to adequately fund its public education system," the resolution says.

The rebellion among the state's school districts began with Placentia Unified School District, according to Superintendent Robert Vislay.

He said that district attempted to obtain a temporary restraining order against the state, keeping it from cutting back on special education and general fund aid.

The courts, Vislay said, didn't grant the restraining order but placed the $270,000 Placentia sought in escrow until December, when still another court battle — dubbed Serrano-Preist is expected to come to an end.

The Serrano-Preist decision was one that required the state to even out funding among the state's various districts, so that they would spend within $100 - the same amount of money on each student, Vislay explained.

He said the decision was a result of pre-

'At the time, Beverly Hills was spending about $3,000-plus per student and we were spending about $1,500," Vislay said.

The Serrano-Preist decision was based on the concept that the quality of a child's education shouldn't be based on where he lives, Vislay said.

Although the state was to even out the situation by June 1, 1981, it was never done, he said.

Vislay said if courts, in December, find against the state for violating the Serrano-Preist decision, the resulting flow of state dollars to local districts could wipe out the presently proposed special education and general fund deficits.

That would eliminate the need for a mass suit, he said.

Meanwhile, Duerr told trustees the state funding situation for next year is still too muddled for local districts to rely on.

The budget is signed into law but details on school allotments may not be available for months,

That's because five different school appropriations decisions have yet to be made and each could mean more or less dollars to local school districts for deferred maintenance of facilities, non-salary and benefit items, special education and regular school programs, he said.

Duerr said more money for school districts. however, will probably mean the Legislature will have to raise taxes or find other services to cut. "With an election around the corner, you know where that's coming from."

Runaway inflation will return, financial seer Howard Ruff says

By Donald C. Bauder Copley News Service

Although some seers see deflation (falling prices) and others see disinflation (falling inflation) and some see a return to price stability, Howard Ruff sees renewed inflation.

He will not get much argument here. The San Ramon-based newsletter writer, TV commentator and author said in an interview that "inflation is practically uncontrollable politically."

Unfunded liabilities of the Social Security system — now $4.5 trillion to $7 trillion, he estimated — are equal to the value of everything which everybody owns," and are enough to bring about a return of high inflation even if his other scenarios don't occur, he said.

However, there are other problems: Savings & loans and wayward financial concerns such as Drysdale Securities will be bailed out by the Federal Reserve; politicians will be unable to stop bribing their constituencies and the Fed will have to monetize everlarger deficits.

Ruff quoted a Scottish writer, Alex-3 ander Fraser Tytler, who noted at the time of the American Revolution that historically, democracies tend to last about 200 years, "and fall apart because of loose fiscal practices. The majority of the people discover they can vote themselves benefits from the public treasury. About 56 percent of people in the United States today are gesting a check from some level of government, and 76 percent are benefitting in some way from government spending." Ruff said.

"That's why I'm betting on inflation," he said, predicting that 25 percent inflation and a 40 percent prime rate of interest are likely in the next three to five years.

He would therefore invest in the old inflation hedges, even though they are now being slaughtered: "You'll see gold at $2,000 to $3,000 possibly by early 1985 or the end of 1986, certainly by the end of the decade. Silver will go to $100," said Ruff.

He likes other depressed tangible investments such as stamps, coins, antiques and "certain" real estate. "Some places in the Midwest may be in a permanent real estate slump, however. It won't be like it was everybody making money on real estate," he said. Investing in rental properties in small towns (where rent control laws would be unlikely) is a possibility, he said.

He would even buy certain bonds but only as a speculation. Since he sees interest rates receding (the prime at 11 and long rates between 11 and 12 and mortgages at 13) within a year, speculators can make money in long bonds - as long as they don't hold on to

The Dow Jones Industrials (30 blue chip and cyclical stocks) are down 70 percent since 1966 when adjusted for inflation, and Ruff sees them continuing to drop in real terms, although he likes some oil stocks now.

Prisoner files civil suit to block mass transfer of inmates at CIM

By RICHARD GRAY Staff Writer

A prisoner filed a civil lawsuit Monday to block the mass transfer of hundreds of protective custody inmates at the California Institution for Men at

Jim Smith, a protective custody prisoner at CIM-East, is asking the court to enjoin the state Department of Corrections from transferring CIM's protective custody inmates to prisons in Northern California and to CIM's general prison population.

State prison officials late last month confirmed plans to move all of CIM's 542 protective custody prisoners to other prisons and replace them with between 700 and 800 medium-security inmates from prisons across the state.

The moves are intended to make better use of state prison facilities and the transfers will span several months, prison officials said.

The first transferring prisoners were to be moved today from CIM-East, the prison's protective custody facility that contains ex-prison gang members, prisoners who have enemies, informants and others requiring separation from the general prison population.

Today, only three CIM-East prisoners were scheduled to be transferred to the "mainline," a term for the general prison population, in a Northern California prison, Regina Stephens, an administrative assistant to CIM's superintendent, said

The three men had volunteered to transfer to the mainline, Stephens said. Twenty-five other protective custody prisoners have also volunteered for the mainline, she said.

But some prisoners and those close to protective custody inmates said Monday the transfer today is more ambitious than what prison officials are

"What we heard was at least a whole bus load of men were being transferred," said Penny Knight of Huntington Beach, the wife of a CIM-East inmate. "The guys that are going (today) are going to (the prison at) Vacaville."

Knight, who was at the prison during the weekend, said, "The guys were discussing things like what they were allowed to take to Vacaville."

Stephens said a move to Vacaville is "incorrect" and that there is not a firm date scheduled for protective custody prisoners to be moved to similar facilities in Northern California.

But contradictions persist.

"They're talking about moving us out right away," protective custody prisoner Vincent Cruz told The Daily Report in a telephone interview. He said he will be moved to the prison at Tracy within Knight and Terrie Blakeman, wife of another inmate, walked Smith's suit through legal filing procedures Monday at West Valley Superior Court and clerks scheduled a tentative hearing date for a preliminary injunction for July 27 in Superior Court.

The two women expect to complete the paperwork today for a temporary restraining order to block the transfers until the July 27 hearing.

The lawsuit demands a jury trial so the alleged "lies to the general public and media can be uncovered," the suit stated.

Smith contends state prison officials are attempting to move high security prisoners from some of the state's toughest prisons to CIM.

Smith alleges prison officials "have falsely relayed information to the general public and media" and "are trying to make the move as quickly as possible in order to hide this truth from the public before it can be prevented."

Smith's lawsuit also alleges the state's intended prisoner shuffle violates the civil rights of CIM's protective custody inmates and is discriminatory. "This (transfer) constitutes a conspiracy to deprive rights," the lawsuit stated.

CIM-East prisoners "will suffer great harm if the en mass move of them ... is permitted to take place, and they will suffer numerous deprivations of their constitutionally protected rights," the lawsuit stat-

"Inmates are not 'pieces of baggage' whom can be picked up and sent anywhere at the mere 'whims' of the defendants without minimal due process being met," the lawsuit stated.

Smith, 33, who aspires to become a lawyer and who works as a clerk at CIM-East, said in a telephone interview that he will not be allowed to work or further his education after he is transferred.

He said protective custody status at CIM provides incentive for prisoners to stay out of trouble, to better themselves while allowing them to "do their time peacefully" without harassment and harm from general population inmates.

Smith, now serving a life term for murder, also said prison officials are ordering the transfers even though the protective custody prisoners' lives will be in danger at their new institutional homes.

Prison officials in Sacramento have insisted they will do everything possible to protect the transferred prisoners but admitted risks are involved.

CIM recommends reprimand for chaplain accused of violations

A recommendation from the California Institution for Men to reprimand one of its chaplains for alleged violations of its prison regulations has been sent to the Department of Corrections in Sacramen-

Phil Guthrie, a spokesman for the department, says the case is still under consideration.

The Rev. Jamieson Matthias, who is affiliated with the United Presbyterian Church in Riverside but lives in Claremont, says that although he has been ordered off the prison grounds, he has not been disciplined for the alleged infractions.

He also challenged that the two allegations constituted "improprieties in any commonly understood meaning of the word." Matthias was ordered off limits at CIM a month ago for what the administration described as prisoner-staff relations, but Carl Owen, a prison spokesman, said he could not give out details because the investigation had not been completed.

But Matthias, who has served as a full-time chaplain at CIM since 1964, said one of the charges involved overfamiliarity with a prisoner with whom he has formed a deep friendship over the years.

The chaplain said that while the convict was out on parole, the two had gone fishing, and later when the felon was returned to the prison for a violation, the minister wrote to him and helped him draw up his new parole plan.

Matthias said that according to the administration such close ties constituted a violation of staffprisoner relationships.

The second charge, according to the chaplain, dealt with withholding information from the administration which had been given to him in confidence.

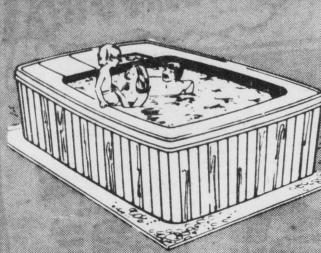

"The very basis of the minister's work is confidence," Matthias contended. "How can he be trusted otherwise?"

trusted otherwise?"

The chaplain said similar incidents have been taking place for years involving chaplains at CIM and no one has made an issue of them until now.

Apparently someone in the administration thought there was some hanky-panky going on," he

Interstate 15E renamed Interstate 215 by state

Interstate 15E in Riverside and San Bernardino counties has been re-designated Interstate 215, state Director of Transportation Adriana Gianturco announced.

The highway was renamed by the Federal Highway Administration and the American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials in response to a request by the California Department of Transportation (Caltrans).

The request was made earlier this year by Caltrans as part of its commitment to bring the highway up to full interstate standards, Gianturco said. The new number makes the highway's designation consistent with nationwide numbering standards for interstate highways.

The I-15E name was one of the last combined number/letter interstate designations in the nation.

In 1972 the existing state highway — from just north of Temecula to Devore — was designated I-

Lunch program changes made

The maximum income a family can earn and still have its children qualify for free or reduced-price meals at school was increased by 10 percent on July

The change is a result of the annual cost-of-living adjustment made by the U.S. Department of Agriculture to help people keep up with inflation, according to Mary Jarratt, assistant secretary of agriculture.

Under the income adjustment, the free meal eligibility — set by Congress at 130 percent of the poverty line — will increase from $10,990 to $12,090 for a family of four. Eligibility for reduced-price meals, set at 185 percent of the poverty level, will increase from $15,630 to $17,210.

The federal poverty line for a family of four is

The Agriculture Department is required by law to update the income limits each July 1 for guidelines governing participation in the free or low-cost meal programs for national school lunch, school breakfast, child care food, special milk and commodity school programs.

Under new annual income limits, a family of one with an income of $6,080 qualifies for free meal eligibility and with an income of $8,660 qualifies for reduced price meal eligibility.

15E while work continued to upgrade the highway to interstate standards. At that time, Caltrans and the Federal Highway Administration agreed that the route would be signed as an interstate route if it was brought up to standard by 1984. But, because of escalating costs, Caltrans asked for an extension of the agreement until 1990, the year when the remainder of the state's interstate system must be completed.

Since the 1972 agreement, Caltrans has spent more than $13 million improving the highway, including construction of an interchange at McCall Boulevard in Sun City.

Caltrans expects to begin construction of new interchanges at Van Buren Boulevard and Ramona Expressway in the next few months at a cost of $15.4 million. Other improvements to bring I-215 to full interstate standards are planned for the next several years at a cost to exceed $38 million, according to Caltrans.
